Order Picking from a two Dimensional System

Andrew Wirth

University of Melbourne

Australia

Abstract

This paper discusses the problem of picking an order from a number of different locations of a two dimensional system. It is assumed that these locations may be accessed by a stacker crane so that the travel time between locations is given by a Chebyshev norm. Results about the mean collection time and the optimal dimensions of such a system are given.